Anniversary of Tom Sayers, "Little Giant" of the Ring

Tomorrow will be the eighty-seventh anniversary of the birth of Tom Sayers, the lightest man who ever held the heavyweight championship, and perhaps the greatest fighter of his poundage who ever lived. The "Little Giant" was born at Pimlico, near Brighton, England, May 25, 1828. He came of that best of all human fighting breeds, the Irish Cockney. In his youth he was a bricklayer, and afterward worked in a railway construction camp and as a sort of bouncer at a "pub."

Sayers was 5 feet 8 1/2 inches in height, and at his best he weighed only about 150 pounds. Although light for a middleweight, he fought his way up to the top of the heavyweight heap, and took part in a battle for the world's championship with the American giant, John C. Heenan. Tom fought his first ring engagement at the age of twenty-one, defeating Abby Couch. This was in 1849. His next battle was with Dan Collins, and Sayers was again the victor. Tom then took on Jack Grant, a veteran of many long combats, and whipped him in sixty-four rounds, leaving two and a half hours. The "Little Wonder" and the "Little Giant," as Sayers was then called, next challenged Nat Langham to fight for the middleweight championship. This time Sayers was defeated, but not disgraced, and, as Langham refused to fight Tom again, Sayers became the recognized champion of the middleweights.

Having cleaned up all the men in his division, Sayers, like Bob Fitzsimmons many years later, had to go for bigger game. In 1856 he was matched with Harry Paulson, a near-champion. Harry weighed 172 pounds, while Tom then tipped the beam at 148 pounds. Paulson fought like a demon, and at one time the odds were 8 to 1 against Tom, but the plucky middleweight eventually conquered after 3 hours and 5 minutes of fighting.

Tom's victory was a great surprise, as up to that time no middleweight had ever had the temerity to fight top-notch heavyweights. By defeating Aaron Jones, Sayers gained more laurels, and in 1857 his backers were willing to pit him against Bill Perry, the Tipton Slasher, who then held the British heavyweight title.

The slasher weighed over 200 pounds and topped six feet by half an inch, giving him an advantage over Sayers of four inches in height and over fifty pounds in weight. The sporting public scoffed at such an unequal match, and there was little money bet on Tom. Sayers slashed the "Slasher" unmercifully, and at the end of the ninth round the champion was so far gone that his seconds tossed in the sponge.

Sayers defended the heavyweight title against Bill Benjamin, whom he defeated in three rounds, and Tom Paddock, who lasted twenty-one rounds. In 1859 he whipped Bob Brettle, and defeated Benjamin again. In 1860 Sayers fought the last battle of his career, his opponent being John C. Heenan, an Irish-American. The contest aroused international interest, since the world's title was involved. The "Benicia Boy," as Heenan was called, was a giant in stature, standing 6 feet 2 1/2 inches. This fight ended in a riot, and the backers of both men claimed the advantage. Heenan was almost blinded and Sayers was badly battered, but the man had any clear advantage. Sayers retired from the ring after that. He traveled with a circus for a time, but was soon afflicted with tuberculosis and diabetes, from the effects of which he died just half a century ago this year. A handsome tomb still marks the last resting place of the "Little Wonder."

Crown Princess To Leave Her Husband As a Result of War

CROWN PRINCESS CECILE

Paris, May 24.—That the Crown Princess Cecile intends to break with her husband, the German crown prince, is the substance of a rumor printed by the Journal des Debats. The newspaper asserts: "We learn from an absolutely certain source that an event, the importance of which cannot escape anybody, is about to occur in Germany. Crown Princess Cecile intends to break with her husband and to leave Berlin for Russia. She is being strongly encouraged in this plan by her mother, the Grand Duchess Anastasia."

The crown princess became the mother of a daughter recently, and the same source reports that she will take the baby daughter with her, leaving the other children at the Berlin court, joining the czarina and her daughters in Red Cross work.

Twenty-two men and one woman, alleged quack doctors, were arraigned in Special Sessions, New York. Six were fined, ten released on suspended sentences, and the case of the other seven put off for a hearing next Friday.

New York, May 24.—In financial circles today Italy's formal declaration against Austria and Germany's reported rejoinder in behalf of her ally, chief concern was with regard to the effect of the new situation upon the foreign commerce of this country. The stock market's response was another sharp advance in shares of the various companies furnishing munitions to the warring nations. Crucible Steel, Bethlehem Steel, Westinghouse Electric and other issues of like character rose one to three points and copper also was strong.
